

Importance of Product Development

What survival and prosperity depend on

In any company, the product is the most important thing.

Everything revolves around the products of the company. They are the whole purpose of the company.

Without products that you can offer and that someone wants, you can leave out everything else. You can leave out organization, you can leave out the whole company. This is so elementary that it can be overlooked, especially if the company has been around for a while and you've gotten used to the business routine.

Business somehow runs, other things keep you busy, you don't find time to reflect and think new thoughts.

New ideas don't fall from the sky. You have to work hard to get them.

If you look at a composer, you see that you have to work out creative ideas, that you have to deal with the material. And that's not going to happen if you're just struggling with delivery deadlines or with complaints in your day-to-day business.

And so you start to lose sight of the further development of your products or the new development of products - and that is fatal.

It's fatal because new ideas don't usually come overnight and because new developments take time.

And when sales start to decline, the distress can become great.

Survivability and prosperity depend primarily on having an acceptable product

And this is the order:

1. having products that you can offer,
2. Organize your company around your products.

Neglecting product development can go well for a short time, or it can go well for generations. But with all companies that no longer exist or are not doing well, this was and is the most important reason:

Lack of innovation or innovation that is too slow!!

Conclusion:

Innovation and product development are your future prosperity.
I can help you with this.
